Dr Urvashi

A Mystique Journey Beyond Body

In realms where body embraces the mind,
A dance of contrast, worlds apart in space.
My body, tethered to earthly fears,
Shies from the tempests, quivers and slashes.

Yet my mind—a boundless sea,
Unfurls its waves, wild and free.
No mortal constraints, no chains to wear,

Fancy soars on wings of air.

My body—a vessel, frail and finite,
It ages, withers, in life's waning light.
But my mind, though ageless, an eternal flame,
Igniting ideas— perennially.

My body stumbles, tires, and falls,
My mind, relentlessly sprawls,
Through knowledge, perhaps.
To distant realms, uncharted shores,
It journeys on and on,
Forever explores the infinite.

My body's limits, a mere façade,
My mind's horizons, forever broad.
It spins in orbits, defying time,
A cosmic dance, sublime, divine.

In the womb of existence, exists,
An intricate cobweb of worlds many.
Body and mind, intertwined though be,
A dichotomy of self, intricate, but free.
When my body yields to nature's decree,
Will my mind break its ties earthly?
To soar aloft on intangible wings,

Unfettered by mortality's strings.

In the maddening dance of life, I've found my goal,
The union of body, mind and soul.
Though in onism's grip, I ponder and seek,
The essence of my true being, weird and mystique.
