

Two Poems by Dr Javed LatooI knew a man in a crowded city

I knew a man in a crowded city.
Tall, handsome and ageing.
Living in a house filled with wine of solitude, the bread of Philosophy, fruits of Poetry, casks of memories sprinkled with salt and sugar, curtains of secrecy;

and no family to return to in the evenings.

He held a rewarding job of midwifing people's affairs.
He bridled his mind with regular reading and writing;

holding his head high, unbending like a solitary oak tree.

He did not take refuge in drinking, smoking, and judging; ceaselessly clipping wings of his expectations; without carrying a moral telescope, he fed his heart with beneficence, friends and soothing music.

He was happy and contented! People often wondered how he got by without a family? I know I could not.

Of space

When I felt your presence
Between every breath,
Between every sound
Reaching my ears,

Between my ceaseless
evaporating thoughts;
Between every word
Ever written or spoken,

When I saw your void
Between every object
In front of my curious eyes,
Between our Earth, the moon,

Sun, Stars, and Galaxies; A tranquillizing sense of Awe and expansion
Filled my heart and mind.
