A little passage

A little passage.

"Staring is a secret language,

A little passageway,

That slips into stories, words like.

The piercing always sudden, as a blow,

And the intimacy, unnerving ,

Dissolving the iceberg into trillions of vast blue.

Today, the lane tastes monsoon flavoured, dewy.

A stealthy look halts at the neighbouring room,
In the poet's eye a small match box,
Inside this rainbow collage,
The boy perhaps staring far away at the Southern blue.
In his tapestry trades a future musician,
Lenon glassed with his striking notes of do-re-mi.
Swift below and look to the octogenarian,
The morning is content in his summer pants,
His denouement a great fallacy,
That ends in whipping against remorse;
It was twenty five, when he slipped away from the staircase of dreams.
And the moth flamed through."
